

'From Awareness to Action'

Mitigating Stress in Humanitarian Aid Workers

Working Conference

26th and 27th of May 2011

The Antares Foundation is delighted to be able to invite you to attend our Working Conference 2011

We are proud to present a program of international speakers representing international humanitarian agencies and specialists in the fields of psychology, psychiatry, organizational development and anthropology.

For the past 9 years, the Antares Foundation has been collaborating with the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC- Atlanta, U.S.A.). Together we have carried out a longitudinal research project into 'Mitigating Stress in Humanitarian Aid Workers' among international staff and surveys among national staff of NGOs in Uganda, Jordan and Sri Lanka. The research was conducted by a large research consortium consisting of the University of Pepperdine, The Headington Program, Columbia University, Fuller Graduate School of Psychology, Mailman School of Public Health, Tulane University School of Public Health and Tropical Medicine, the University of Amsterdam and the Antares Foundation.

- The first day of our 2011 conference will present the findings and results of the CDC research project and we will discuss how to translate these results into policy and action for humanitarian aid agencies.
- On the second day of this working conference, various master classes will be held, in which experts will explore and discuss the relevant findings and recommendations from their own fields of experience

We will contact you soon with details of the official agenda and how to register. All the information will also be published on our website.
